

The Rise and Growth of Movie Marketing

Zeann Al Amareh

Abstract

This article explores the evolution of movie marketing in the world of entertainment. The movie industry has witnessed a significant transformation in the way films are marketed and promoted, transitioning from simple marketing methods, such as posters and ads, to today's advanced strategies. When movies start making their budgets, studios rolled out their advertisements earlier to attract local audiences. Over time, it grew into large, worldwide campaigns, especially with blockbuster movies like Iron Man and The Avengers, which used TV commercials and advertisements to attract a larger audience. As internet influence grew, movie marketing has expanded to reach audiences directly on the platforms that they are using, especially streaming services and digital formats. Today, a big part of marketing budget is spent on online ads to reach more people. Movie marketing also uses social media and influencers to promote their movies, build hype and create excitement.

Keywords: cinematic development, merchandising, social media, worldwide campaigns, advertisement strategies, box office statistics, digital marketing, film industry.

Introduction:

Movies and theatrical films have captured audiences over the years since its first film. But just like the rest of the world, film marketing has undergone a fascinating transformation over the years. Discover how the advent of social media has enhanced the importance of getting audience. Old marketing has to include simple posters and word-of-mouth promotion, nowadays, in the film industry grew and expanded, as that is marketing strategies. The introduction of social media has made it possible to reach more audiences and generate more buzz. With today's advancements, today movie marketing is a complex and sophisticated process that involves a variety of techniques, such as marketing on digital platforms to reach a global audience. The evolution of film marketing from traditional methods to creative digital strategies has significantly changed the industry and influenced audience behaviors, demonstrating the power of effective modern marketing and promotion. Understanding how movie marketing has evolved is critical as it highlights the importance of movie marketing for film's commercial success and shaping the audience's experience. Social media in movie marketing have transformed the way films are promoted, social media campaigns have become a primary tool for engaging with audiences on a personal level. By sharing behind-the-scenes footage, exclusive clips, and interactive posts, studios have been able to establish and maintain excited spending relations. "A social film is a movie poster with a technological twist, an easily technologically accepted as image, as opposed to a film film. The film has a public substance of projected social film, place in film in 1990s, but decades passed before social media picture became extremely practical" (David Film's).

How Marketing Movies Changed Marketing from Poster to Social Media

The marketing team advantage of each industry format enables them to engage the public in the promotion of the film. According to Roberts et al., he proposed that marketing (initially goes through primary, secondary, tertiary and below-level channels. Creating film-differentiated experiences such as pop-up events, interactive installations, and virtual reality screens, making it more interesting for the audience and the film market a unique experience for each film viewer. Movie marketing also uses strategies that will work by attracting some viewers for the film, such as using "targeted campaigns", "word-of-mouth", "experiential marketing", "word-of-mouth marketing", and such more. Movie marketing campaigns also involve and influence some "social networks and networks". The emergence of new and changing platforms like YouTube, Instagram, and TikTok has considerably changed and helped various marketing strategies. According to Davidson, he claims that the movie industry has witnessed a significant transformation in the way films have been promoted and presented as of recently, with the use of "Digital platforms" and the widespread use of the internet along with social marketing that has shifted the focus to online platforms.

Online review, trailers, and hybrid-theatrical-digital types have been essential tools in film adaptation and activity towards potential viewers. Social media platforms have created power marketing by providing digital and interactive access to influence of users.

Using TikTok as an example, the power of TikTok provides frequent and instant content, which grabs the viewers' attention even more by showing the behind-the-scenes of the project in a personal way. Additionally, influence and relations play an important role in affecting the movie since spreading reviews through their social media profiles, offering a boost and the engagement of fans for the upcoming movies. Collaborations with popular brands, events, and influencers can generate additional exposure, the strategy is often used in the form of product placement either merchandise or promotional campaigns that reach a wider audience. In conclusion, the evolution of movie marketing is powered into the film, digital and social by advancement in technology, digital platforms, and changing consumer behavior.

The future of movie marketing

The future of movie marketing is all about immersion, interaction, and personalization. Studios are pushing that audience are expected to be more engaged than ever before. As movie marketing evolves, there might be some when the people never thought would exist, which could lead to major success in the movie industry and significant profits.

VR has transformed how fans interact with films, allowing them to experience movies beyond the screen. Some studios now offer VR experiences where viewers can step into the film's world, explore virtual locations, and interact with characters. Films like Avatar have shown the power of VR in movie marketing. The use of VR provides great opportunities, immersion and profitability over time.

Film marketing in the future will increasingly rely on digital platforms and social media and partnerships with influencers to reach a wider audience. Additionally, film games, especially those connected like Fortnite, are highlighting movie posters by adding dramatic elements and compelling narratives. The campaign success-driven posters, showcasing a first-person perspective of famous figures in the movie's background and scenes in deeper perspective with the characters. The combination of theme marketing and video posting offers a more engaging and comprehensive experience. In conclusion, the future of movie marketing is moving towards more technological and creative collaborations like other industries and interactive experiences, keeping fans engaged in new and exciting ways.

Conclusion

In conclusion, the evolution of movie marketing highlights how the industry has adapted to new technologies and changing audience expectations. From the early days of posters to today's digital campaigns, marketing strategies have grown more creative and targeted. As technology like social media, televisions, and streaming platforms have allowed the industry to reach audiences worldwide, there have been several new marketing strategies becoming a key part of modern campaigns. Looking ahead, the future of movie marketing will continue to evolve with technologies such as artificial intelligence and augmented reality, as well as the growing influence of streaming services with media people to access content that are not shared in specific locations. While technological advancements have transformed the industry, the human element, the power of audience engagement, and strong narratives, as the heart of a movie's success, will continue to be the foundation that sustains and enriches it. The movie industry is poised to thrive in this digital age, through social media interaction and the stories, the movie itself, they are no longer a passive viewer. Research shows that higher engagement in platforms like Instagram or TikTok correlates positively to the growth of a movie. They are more likely to spread the word about a movie faster than that. Ultimately, as movie marketing evolves with new technologies, the connection between film and audience will continue to be the key to a movie's lasting success.

